Headline:
Dry, sunny with light winds.

Today:
A fine, dry day ahead with the vast majority seeing plentiful sunshine. However temperatures will be down a little from yesterday from the Central Belt southwards. Northern Isles turning cloudy for afternoon, with northwest winds increasing fresh.

Tonight:
Mostly staying dry with clear skies leading to a slight frost for many central and southern parts. Thickening cloud spreading to the north, bring a few light drizzly showers.

Friday:
Dry and bright for most, particularly from Central Belt southwards. Across north rather cloudy start with a few light showers in far north, but brighter spells increasing into the afternoon.

Outlook for Saturday to Monday:
Saturday dry and bright. Sunday brings strong to gale winds, a band of rain crossing from north, clearing to showers, these wintry to all levels late Sunday and through Monday.
